A study reveals that targeting EHMT2 in colorectal cancer enhances immune response and T-cell activity, offering new immunotherapy strategies for difficult-to-treat cancers.

Inflammatory Bowel Disease

- 483 Dysbiosis and Associated Stool Features Improve Prediction of Response to Biological Therapy in Inflammatory Bowel Disease
C. Caenepeel, G. Falony, K. Machiels, B. Verstockt, P. J. Goncalves, M. Ferrante, J. Sabino, J. Raes, S. Vieira-Silva, and S. Vermeire

Clinical data, stool features, and detection of microbiome dysbiosis were used to generate a model that allowed prediction of anti-tumor necrosis factor- α , vedolizumab or ustekinumab treatment outcome in patients with inflammatory bowel diseases with 73.9% accuracy.

Endoscopy

M. Desai, C. Campbell, A. Perisetti, S. Srinivasan, D. Radadiya, H. Patel, S. Melquist, D. K. Rex, and P. Sharma

A prospective study at a single endoscopy unit found that the estimated carbon footprint for every 100 gastrointestinal procedures was high, at 1501 kg carbon dioxide equivalents, which equates to 1680 pounds of coal burned, and that up to 20% of this could be reduced if appropriate waste segregation were performed.
