ORIGINAL RESEARCH

Full Reports

Esophagus

- 914 In Obesity, Esophagogastric Junction Fat Impairs Esophageal Barrier Function and Dilates Intercellular Spaces via Hypoxia-Inducible Factor 2 α
S. Paris, X. Zhang, D. Davis, A. D. Nguyen, A. Ustaoglu, R. M. Genta, X. Wang, I. Kale, R. Ekeanyanwu, S. Leeds, M. Ward, E. Podgaetz, Q. Zhang, Y. Chang, Z. Pan, P. J. Woodland, D. Sifrim, S. J. Spechler, and R. F. Souza

Abdominal fat of obese patients secretes substances that make the esophageal lining excessively permeable and predisposed to damage from refluxed stomach acid.

GI Cancer

- 931 Risk of Colorectal Cancer Associated With Frequency of Colorectal Polyp Diagnosis in Relatives
Y. Hu, E. Kharazmi, Q. Liang, K. Sundquist, J. Sundquist, and M. Fallah

A higher frequency of colorectal polyp diagnoses among relatives is associated with a greater risk of (early-onset) colorectal cancer, even when considering the number of affected relatives and age at polyp diagnosis.

Inflammatory Bowel Disease

939 Physiological Data Collected From Wearable Devices Identify and Predict Inflammatory Bowel Disease Flares

R. P. Hirten, M. Danielelto, M. Sanchez-Mayor, J. K. Whang, K. W. Lee, K. Landell, M. Zweig, D. Helmus, T. J. Fuchs, Z. A. Fayad, G. N. Nadkarni, L. Keefer, M. Suarez-Farinas, and B. E. Sands

See editorial on page 870.

Commonly used commercially available wearable devices can identify and predict inflammatory bowel disease exacerbations, opening the potential for their use to monitor the disease.

952 Mechanistic Implications of the Mediterranean Diet in Patients With Newly Diagnosed Crohn's Disease: Multiomic Results From a Prospective Cohort

L. Godny, S. Elial-Fatal, J. Arrouasse, T. Sharar Fischler, L. Reshef, Y. Kutukov, S. Cohen, T. Pfeffer-Gik, R. Barkan, S. Shakhman, A. Friedenber, M. H. Pauker, K. M. Rabinowitz, E. Shaham-Barda, I. Goren, U. Gophna, H. Banai Eran, J. E. Ollech, Y. Snir, Y. Broitman, I. Avni-Biron, H. Yanai, and I. Dotan

See editorial on page 872.

Following a Mediterranean diet in patients with Crohn's disease is linked to less severe disease and lower inflammatory markers, possibly due to beneficial changes in gut microbes and metabolites.

Functional GI Disease

965 Human Enteric Glia Diversity in Health and Disease: New Avenues for the Treatment of Hirschsprung Disease

J. D. Windster, N. J. M. Kakialatu, L. E. Kuil, A. Antanaviciute, A. Sacchetti, K. C. MacKenzie, J. Peulen-Zink, T. W. Kan, E. Bindels, E. de Pater, M. Doukas, T. P. P. van den Bosch, S. Yousefi, T.-S. Barakat, C. J. H. M. Meussen, P. C. E. J. Sloots, R. M. H. Wijnen, K. Parikh, W. Boesmans, V. Melotte, R. M. W. Hofstra, A. Simmons, and M. M. Alves

See editorial on page 874.

Two major classes of enteric glia were identified in the human pediatric intestine—canonical and Schwann-like—highlighting a potential role of the latter for treatment of Hirschsprung disease.

RESEARCH LETTERS

980 Prevalence of Pediatric Inflammatory Bowel Disease in the United States: Pooled Estimates From Three Administrative Claims Data Sources

M. D. Kappelman, C. Brensinger, L. E. Parlett, A. Hurtado-Lorenzo, and J. D. Lewis

See commentary on page 851.

983 DNA Mismatch Repair Gene Mosaicism Is Rare in People With Mismatch Repair-Deficient Cancers

R. Walker, J. E. Joo, K. Mahmood, P. Georgeson, ANGELS-CCFR-Muir-Torre Consortium, I. M. Winship, and D. D. Buchanan

987 Postoperative Endoscopic Outcomes in the MESOCOLIC Trial Investigating Mesenteric-Based Surgery for Crohn's Disease
